Social Skill Week of February 11th

It is important that children have the ability to accept and tolerate differences so they appreciate and respect others for their individuality. Helping children understand that everyone has something unique and important to share with others is a lifelong skill that will enhance their lives.

Tolerating Differences

- Think about what is the same between you and the other person
- Take note of the differences
- Focus on the shared interests and activities you and the other person have in common
- Appreciate and respect the other person as an individual

Below is an article and video about tolerating differences
